MARYLEBONE

PRIVATE SCHOOLS

MANOR HOUSE

A considerable school was kept for many years by Mr de la Place, and after by Mr Fountaine in the Manor House. On Mr Fountaine's secession the building was demolished in 1791.

See Ashbridge collection: cuttings from newspapers and periodicals, 1734-1772; sketch of Mrs Fountaine's Mary-bone school, 1789; school house at Marylebone, 1790; Mr Fountaine's school, 1790.

LISSON GROVE HOUSE

See Overture for the pianoforte composed and dedicated to the young ladies of the school. [F781.4 - Ashbridge]

16 NORTHWICK TERRACE

In the 1871 Census [RG10/183/81-82] Abraham Mendes, from Jamaica, was running a private school here (with his wife and eight children). He had two assistant masters, six servants and 18 pupils, all boys aged 9-18. Pupils came from as far afield as Jamaica, Portugal, the Azores and Egypt, as well as from London.

GREAT CUMBERLAND STREET

In 1871 census [RG10/161/90].

In 1996 the area of the former borough contains two secondary schools, of which one is Anglican; and 12 primary schools, of which 4 are Anglican and 3 Roman Catholic.

ALL SAINTS CE, St Marlebone

In 1871 Census at 84-85 Margaret Street [RG10/149/17]. In 1903 it had accommodation for 468 pupils.

ALL SOULS [CE PRIMARY] SCHOOL

Founded in 1824 for the children of All Souls and Trinity districts, as the Eastern National School. The schoolhouse was in Riding House Lane, in a 'commodious building' adjoining All Souls' Church, and was erected by subscription. In 1833 there was accommodation for 500 children, but the actual number in the school at that time was 417 (257 boys and 160 girls). 74 were clothed at the expense of the charity (44 boys and 30 girls).

1825: school began in Riding House Street, in cottages and stables next to All Souls Church

1827: cottages pulled down and new school built

1835: girls and infants schools built in Great Portland Street (Gosfield Street)

1906: both schools condemned as unsuitable

1908: new school opened in Foley Street

CAPLAND STREET, JUNIOR

Portman Market. Board School. In 1903 it had accommodation for 782 pupils. It also had a Centre for the Instruction of the 'Mentally Defective', with 60 pupils.

CENTRAL NATIONAL SCHOOL

63 High Street. In 1903 it had accommodation for 1,100 pupils.

A Day School of Industry was established in 1791 in Paradise Street, for 300 children. It was supported by voluntary contributions, charity sermons and the children's earnings. The boys were employed in plaiting straw and the girls in straw plaiting and needlework. In 1808 Sir Thomas Bernard, a philanthropist, put forward a proposal for the general education of the poor of St Marylebone. He bought a house and garden in High Street, on which a schoolroom was erected. This new institution was soon afterwards incorporated with the School of Industry, and placed under the direction of the Governors of the United National Schools. The entrance to the schoolroom for the children was in Paddington Street. In 1825, following the establishment of the Eastern and Western National Schools, it was resolved that this school should henceforth be known as the Central National School. The aim of the school was to provide useful and religious instruction for the children of the poor living in the parish, and 'to qualify them for those situations in life, which they will be called upon to fill'. In 1833 the school contained 500 children (337 boys and 163 girls), but it seemed that many poor families were failing to take advantage of the education it provided because they did not know they could apply for admission.

CLERGY ORPHAN SCHOOLS

Schools of the incorporated Clergy Orphan Society at St John's Wood. Had no connection with St Marylebone parish. Schools established 1749 to relieve the distress of deceased clergymen's families, by clothing, maintaining and educating the children until they were of an age to be put apprentice. A boys' school was established at Acton, and a girls' school at Lisson Green. In 1812 the school at St John's Wood was built by subscription, and the schools moved there. In 1833 of the 130 children at the school, only 6 came from London. The boys remained at the school until they were 14, and the girls until the age of 16.

ST MARYLEBONE CHARITY SCHOOL

The Charity was founded in 1750 for 'instructing, clothing, qualifying for useful servants, and apprenticing, the Children of industrious poor Parishioners'. In 1754 the Countess of Oxford gave the trustees a piece of ground in High Street, called 'lower Church field', for a term of 999 years at a peppercorn rent, on which the school was built. The charity gradually expanded until by 1822 it was able to clothe, maintain and educate 120 children (60 boys and 60 girls).

1768: 20 girls maintained and clothed, and 40 boys clothed.
1770: 26 girls maintained and 40 boys clothed.
1785: 26 girls and 40 boys maintained and clothed.
1789: 28 girls and 40 boys.
1791: 30 girls and 50 boys.
1792: 32 girls and 50 boys.
1793: 38 girls and 50 boys.
1795: 44 girls and 50 boys.
1802: 50 girls and 50 boys.
1815: 54 girls and 54 boys.
1818: 60 girls and 60 boys.
1820: 60 girls and 50 boys.
1822: 60 girls and 60 boys.

The standard of the boys' school was never as satisfactory as the girls', so in 1829 it was decided to abolish the boys' school and concentrate all the funds on the girls' school. In 1833 they were clothing, maintaining and educating 105 girls, with plans to take 20 more as soon as funds allowed.

1833: 'the Girls are taught to read and write, and are practised in such of the rules of arithmetic as the Trustees think necessary; they also learn plain-work, and regularly assist in performing the domestic offices in the house, that they may be trained to the habits and duties of useful servants. Above all, they are carefully instructed in the knowledge of their religion and the practice of its duties'. (Thomas Smith, A Topographical and Historical Account of the Parish of St Mary-le-bone, 1833, p.171)

At the age of 15 the girls were discharged and given as Bible, a Common Prayer Book, a short form of private prayer, and a printed exhortation to the proper discharge of their duty. As an encouragement, a reward of 2 guineas was given to girls who, 3 years after leaving the school, could produce a certificate showing that they had remained with one employer for at least 2 years and conducted themselves with 'honesty, sobriety and diligence'. Alternatively, after 5 years they could show a certificate proving they had been in 2 employments for a total of at least 3 years.

By the 19th century there was some competition for funds with the National Schools, but it was pointed out that this was the first school in the parish and took children from anywhere in the parish. The support of wealthy parishioners was also urged on the basis of the special advantages offered by the school. These advantages were: 'vigilant control' of the girls who lived within its walls, 'wholesome discipline' to which they are 'continually subjected', but most of all 'in their removal from the contagion of evil example'. 'Their minds are thus deeply impressed with the principles of religion, before they can be assailed with temptation; and they are inured to habits of industry and sobriety, at a time when the idle cannot approach to seduce, or the profligate to corrupt them'. There is also the benefit to their families, as the 'industrious mechanic', struggling hard to maintain his family, is freed from the expense of having to clothe and maintain his daughters, and by this may even be saved from 'that last sad retreat of hopeless poverty' the parish workhouse.

The Another advantage for the wealthy is that the girls are ‘trained up in habits of cleanliness and industry, and qualified to fill, with credit to themselves and comfort to their employers, the useful station of domestic servants’.

248 Marylebone Road

Known as the Philological School 1797-1901.

Closed in 1981.

Philological School, built 1855, Marylebone Road.

The Philological School was founded in 1792, under the patronage of the Duke of York, and a school was built in King Street, Bryanston Square (later called Nutford Place). In 1827 the school moved to larger premises in Marylebone Road and George IV became its patron. On his death Queen Victoria became its patroness. In 1832 there were 127 boys at the school.

For boys, not just in the parish of St Marylebone. Aim was ‘to educate the sons of Clergymen, Naval and Military Officers, Professional Men, Merchants, Manufacturers, Clerks in Public Offices, the higher order of Tradesmen, and other Persons of an equally respectable class of society, whose families have been in better circumstances and are reduced by accident or misfortune, whereby they are rendered incapable of affording their children a suitable education’. Supported by voluntary contributions.

Boys are educated in ‘English and French, in Writing and Arithmetic, Geometry, Algebra, Geography, the Principles of Drawing, and the Rudiments of Latin’ as well as receiving religious instruction. They were also entitled to certain articles of clothing, but were not boarded.

In 1824 James Tillard, a private gentleman of Canterbury, gave £4,000 to the parish to build a school next to St Mary's Church, on condition that he received an annuity of £200 during his life. On his death in 1828 he bequeathed the sum to the parish as a charity for the upkeep of the school. In 1833 there were two schoolrooms, capable of accommodating 600 children: 350 boys and 250 girls. 100 of these (50 boys and 50 girls) were clothed at the expense of the Charity. The children were taken from the parishes of St Mary's and Christ Church. In 1833 the rules stated that the children had to be between the ages of 6 and 14, and must either have had small pox or been vaccinated. To be admitted children had to be recommended by a trustee. They had to attend church every Sunday morning and afternoon, and some went in the evening as well. When the children left the school it was generally to go into service of some kind.

PADDINGTON

The first reference to education for the poor is found in the Overseers Accounts for 1697, when the parish paid for a 'foundling school'. A charity school seems to have existed during the 18th century, but to have ceased about 1780. By 1795, Paddington only had a Sunday School. In 1802 the parish decided to re-establish a free school for poor children, which became known as St Mary's. In 1831 a second church school was built at Bayswater to meet the increasing need. There were several private schools in the early 19th century, including a school for 50 girls, run by Mrs Sutcliffe in Orme Square from 1829, and a private infant school for 100 pupils, from 1833.

By 1850 there were four National schools, which received parliamentary grants, as well as being supported by charity and parish funds. These were St Mary's, St John's, Bayswater and St John's, Kensal Green (actually in a detached part of Chelsea parish, which became part of Paddington in 1900). These were joined by Westbourne and All Saint's National schools by 1855. In 1848 a ragged school opened, and from the 1850s there were Roman Catholic and nonconformist schools, which did not receive parliamentary grants. Eight more Church schools were founded between 1859 and 1870, making a total of 14, and there was a workhouse school from 1847 to 1871. After 1870 three more Church schools were founded, making a total of 18, and others were enlarged.

The first Board schools were opened in Queens Park in 1878 and 1881, followed by two more in Amberley Road (1881) and Campbell Street, Maida Vale (1881), and a further two, the Moberley (1884) and Kilburn Lane (1885). Essendine Road opened in 1900, making a total of seven Board schools.

In 1902, Paddington held a Children's Coronation Fete to mark the Coronation of Edward VII. A poster advertising the programme of events on the day shows there were 29 schools taking part in the procession, and a total of 22,221 children participating, who each received a souvenir copy of 'King Edward's Realm'.

In 1913 Paddington contained 8 council elementary schools, of which 7 were former Board schools, and 20 non-provided schools, of which 3 were Roman Catholics and 1 was Jewish. There were 2 council secondary schools: the County Secondary school, Paddington and Maida Vale High school, and 1 non-provided secondary: St Mary's College.

By 1951 there were 11 Council schools, 7 primary and 4 secondary; and 13 voluntary schools of which 12 were primary and one secondary. 10 of the Council schools lay in Paddington North, the poorest area, but only 5 of the voluntary schools.

In 1963 Paddington was joined with Westminster under ILEA. It then contained 3 mixed secondary schools, of which one was Anglican and one Roman Catholic, and 20 primary schools, of which 7 were Anglican and 3 Roman Catholic.

In 1997 Paddington, together with Marylebone, comes under the City of Westminster's Education Committee. The area of the former Borough contains 3 secondary schools, including one Anglican and one Roman Catholic; 17 primary schools, of which 7 are Anglican and 3 Roman Catholic; 2 special schools and 2 nursery schools.

Westbourne Collegiate School

ST ANNE, SOHO

ANGLO-FRENCH RC

18 Lisle Street, Leicester Square. Listed in 1903.

Originally founded as the Notre Dame de France Roman Catholic School in Leicester Place in 1866, when Soho was still the centre for French Roman Catholics in London. In 1890 the boys' school moved to 8 Lisle Street, and in 1911 to 34-35 Lisle Street. The schools were closed a few years after the end of World War II.

CHARING CROSS ROAD

Soho. Board School. In 1903 it had accommodation for 496 pupils.

1823-1846 schoolroom built on former burial ground north of chapel by Calvinistic Methodists. [Survey of London, XXXIII, p282-3]

Became National School in 1852.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND COMMERCIAL SCHOOL

14 Manette Street, Soho. This school occupied former parish workhouse 1839-1847.

FRENCH PROTESTANT SCHOOL

From 1874-1879 the French Protestant School was at 10 Golden Square, in a house previously used as a school of arms by Baptiste Bertrand, a celebrated fencing master of the day (1862-1869). It was then known as the Salle Bertrand, and became the premier fencing academy in England. In 1898 a new building was opened at 14-17 Noel Street. In 1903 it had accommodation for 234 pupils. The school closed in 1939, but the building remains with a frieze inscribed 'Ecole de L'Eglise Protestante Francaise de Londres'. Two doorways are marked 'filles' and 'garcons'.

10 Golden Square; part of the house used as a school of arms by Baptiste Bertrand, a celebrated fencing master of the day, from 1862-1869. It was then known as the Salle Bertrand, and became the premier fencing academy in England. From 1874-1879 the house was occupied by a French Protestant School.

31 Golden Square: part of the house was occupied by the School of Japanese Self Defence 1905-1925. Demolished 1930.

PULTENEY BOARD SCHOOL

Berwick Street, Soho.

This building was erected for the London School Board in 1880 on the site previously occupied by a number of small houses and St Luke's National School.

In 1903 it had accommodation for 940 pupils.

ST ANNE'S NATIONAL SCHOOL

Dean Street, Soho. In 1903 it had accommodation for 914 pupils.

Founded at end of 1699 as a charity school for 40 boys. Two rooms hired in Frith Street, and number of boys almost immediately increased to 50. Boys provided with clothes but not boarded. In 1703 the school moved to new premises at corner of Frith and Church Streets. In 1704 a school for 30 girls was founded in the parish poorhouse off Wardour Street, where it remained c1708-11 and may then have shared the same premises as the boys' school. The schools remained there until the 1730s when they moved to a larger site south of Rose (now Manette) Street.

In 1802 the number of boys was limited to 120, but by 1858 the schools were attended by 134 boys, 70 girls and 172 infants. They were by then National Schools.

In 1872 the schools moved to 21 Dean Street (previously used by St Patrick's Charity School and Western Jewish Girls' School).

In 1877 the number of pupils was 1,005, but with the decrease in population following the Shaftesbury Avenue and Charing Cross Road improvements the number fell, and in 1898-99 the average attendance was 180 boys, 180 girls and 183 infants. Fees ranged from 1d to 3d a week

The schools closed in 1939, when they were attended by 82 children. The site is now occupied by the West End Great Synagogue, rebuilt in 1963.

ST MARY [THE VIRGIN] NATIONAL SCHOOL

Charing Cross Road. Founded in 1852, after the Church was built in 1850 as chapel of ease for St Anne's. The first premises were a schoolroom built on a former burial ground north of a chapel, used by Calvinistic Methodists, 1823-1846. In 1873 new school buildings erected on site of former almshouses, with accommodation for 600 children. In 1877 the school was transferred to the London School Board. In 1888 an inspector complained of the proximity of cottages whose inhabitants were of 'the lowest class' and performed 'gross indecencies' within view of the children and teachers. In 1891-3 the cottages were bought and laid out as playgrounds and other buildings. In 1903 it had accommodation for 496 pupils, but by December 1912 only 40 children were on the school roll. It was closed in 1913, and the building transferred to the St Martin's School of Art (since rebuilt).

ST PARTICK'S RC [CHARITY] SCHOOL

Denmark Street. Moved to 21 Dean Street in 1812 – remained there until 1832. In 1817 instruction was being given to 600 children, and by 1822 the school was educating ‘the whole of the Irish children west of a line running north and south through Fleet Market [Farringdon Street]’. Moved to Great Chapel Street in 1888. In 1903 it had accommodation for 741 pupils.

SOHO ACADEMY

8 Soho Square. Martin Clare first opened his school at 1 Soho Square in 1717, and in a school text book entitled Youth's Introduction to Trade and Business which he published in 1720, he described himself as ‘M Clare, School Master in Soho Square, London, with whom Youth may Board, and be fitted for Business’. In 1725-26 Clare moved to no 8, where his school became known as the Soho Academy. Throughout the 18th century it was one of the most celebrated and successful private boarding schools. He published a book in the late 1740s called Rules and Orders for the Government of the Academy in Soho Square, with his partner and successor Revd Cuthbert Barwis. The fee for board and tuition was £30 per year plus extras. The boys were taught French, drawing, dancing and fencing, and there were weekly lectures on morality, religion and natural and experimental philosophy, ‘for the Explication of which, a large Apparatus of Machines and Instruments is provided’. Dr Barwis took over the school after Clare's death in 1751, when the school became known for its regular performances of Shakespeare's plays. Several boys later went on to become actors, including Joseph Holman, John Liston and John Bannister. The dramatist Thomas Morton was also a former pupil. Instruction in drawing and painting was also given, and both Thomas Rowlandson and J M W Turner attended the school for a time. Other pupils included the architect Philip Hardwick, Henry Angelo the author of Reminiscences, John Horne Tooke the politician and Philologist, and the sons of James Boswell and Edmund Burke.

Dr Cuthbert Barwis died in 1782, leaving the school to his nephew John Barwis. He also left him the maps, globes and prints and his ‘mathematical and philosophical instruments and apparatus’. He was succeeded in 1785 by Dr William Barrow until 1799, and then by Revd William Whitelock until 1805, when the school closed or moved to premises elsewhere. In its later years the number of pupils declined, may be because of the decision of Barrow to discontinue the theatrical performances for which it had become renowned. In the 1804 edition of his Essay on Education he wrote that the plays had exposed his pupils and school to censure and moral danger, even though the performances had attained ‘an extraordinary degree of excellence’. However, in 1801 the school was still described as ‘the first academy in London’.

SOHO PARISH CE PRIMARY SCHOOL

23 Great Windmill Street, W1

St Peter's Temporary Schools were established about 1860, at the same time as the church, which was completed in 1861. They began in an old building in a yard behind what was then 40 Rupert Street, and later became part of the site of the Apollo Theatre.

In 1870, the church bought 23 Great Windmill Street, and 1-2 Queen's Head Court from the Commissioners of Woods and Forests, and a new school opened the following year. The school, which had to be squeezed into the space of a small Georgian house, was built as a memorial to the 14th Earl of Derby, who had been a liberal benefactor to St Peter's Church (he donated £4,500 towards the cost of building it). His bust can be seen over the centre doorway, and on the floor above are the crossed keys of St Peter. In 1877 the school was extended by adding a new wing. This was a Victorian Gothic adaptation of the Georgian house previously on this site at 15 Archer Street.

In 1953 St Peter's was united with the combined parishes of St Anne's and St Thomas's, Soho. The church was closed in 1954 and demolished.

In 1997 it is a voluntary aided primary school with 135 pupils, of whom 45% are second language learners.

ST CLEMENT DANES

ST CLEMENT DANES [CE PRIMARY SCHOOL]

Drury Lane, WC2 (1996)

Charity school was established by subscription about 1701, for the education of 50 boys and 30 girls in reading, writing and arithmetic, as well as the elements of Christian knowledge. The girls were also taught needlework. In 1714 there were 70 boys and 40 girls in the school, but in 1741 the number of boys was reduced to 60. In 1817 there were 60 boys and 22 girls in the school, and the girls lived in the school house. Boys were admitted at 7 and usually remained until 10, when they were apprenticed out. Girls were taken at 9 and many remained until 15 when they were given a suit of clothes (before going into service). In 1903 it had accommodation for 527 pupils.

ST MARY-LE-STRAND

ST MARY-LE-STRAND CHARITY SCHOOL

Founded by voluntary contributions in 1708, and supported by dividends of stock, a small donation from the Ironmongers' Company, subscriptions, a collection at a charity sermon and a dinner on the day of the procession to St Paul's. At first there was only a boys school, taking 30 boys. In 1815 the girls school was established, after which there were 25 boys and 15 girls. The boys were taught reading, writing and arithmetic and the girls reading and needlework, but they are not all taught writing and accounts. Admitted into the school from 7 to 10, and stay until 14. Appointed by subscribers in rotation. They are of the poorest class in the parish, and parishioners are always preferred.

ST GEORGE HANOVER SQUARE

Rocque's map of 1746 shows two schools in St George's parish – General Steuart's Charity on the east side of the burial ground attached to Grosvenor Chapel, and St George's School in Noel Street on land adjoining Trinity Chapel in Conduit Street. This seems to have been a private school which did not outlast the 18th century.

GENERAL STEUART'S SCHOOL

South Street, Grosvenor Square

Charity school, founded by the bequest of General William Steuart, whose will was dated 21 May 1726. He left £5,000 for the establishment of a school for 20 boys of honest poor parents of the parish. Master was to be a clergyman of the Church of England. Boys to be instructed in the principles of the church of England, and to be taught to read and write, so as to qualify them for servants or other useful employment. In 1742 his trustees bought a piece of freehold land in South Street, just outside the Grosvenor estate, and built a school house there.

By 1802 it had fallen into neglect. New trustees appointed who felt funds were insufficient to maintain more than 10 boys. In 1817 it was amalgamated with St George's Parochial School, in General Steuart's School building. 24 poor boys continued to be taught here under the bequest. In 1817 they were taught reading, writing, cyphering and were entitled to be instructed in all trades that may be taught in the parochial school. They learnt the catechism and read other books of religious instruction. The boys are aged 7-15.

The endowments of the General Steuart Charity continue to benefit the boys, past and present, of today's St George's School.

ST GEORGE'S HANOVER SQUARE CE PRIMARY SCHOOL

South Street, W1 (1996)

See also General Steuart's School: The land on which Steuart's school stood forms the south-eastern part of the site of the present school.

In May 1803, a group of parishioners, concerned at the lack of educational facilities, met to raise money for the provision of Parish Schools. The first of these opened in leasehold premises in South Street in 1804.

The development of Belgravia brought a demand for a school in that area of the parish and in 1810 the Board of Managers discussed plans for a second school. Premises in Belgrave Street were acquired in 1815, and on 18 December 19 boys and 23 girls were admitted. This school still continues as St Peter's, Eaton Square, Primary School in Lower Belgrave Street.

The St George's United Day Schools of Instruction and Industry were severely practical in their purpose. In addition to elementary education, the boys were taught tailoring and the girls straw plaiting, bonnet making and basket work. St George's Schools were maintained by voluntary subscriptions and the proceeds of charity sermons preached in the churches and chapels of the neighbourhood.

The original premises in South Street were evidently not very suitable, and in 1817 this and General Steuart's school were amalgamated, this united school being conducted in General Steuart's buildings, which were probably enlarged at this time. (Site shown on 1869 OS map).

St George's School was limited to 500 children over 7 years of age, and in 1829 the problem of younger children began to be tackled. In 1831 a Parochial Infant School for children from 2 to 7 years of age was opened on the north side of St Mark's Chapel, North Audley Street. In 1841, another school was built on part of the yard attached to Grosvenor Chapel – this is now Liddon House.

In 1898 a fine new building was built on land in South Street presented by the Duke of Westminster. The architect was P A Robson, and it cost £13,745. The old school building was closed and demolished in 1897, and until the new school opened in 1899 the girls and infants were temporarily accommodated in the old Institute in Grosvenor Hill. Parents of pupils were required to pay 6d a week.

In 1903 the school in South Street was known as St George Higher Grade School, with accommodation for 600 pupils.

In 1931 the Boys and Girls departments were amalgamated into a mixed school under a headmaster. At the beginning of the Second World War most of the children were evacuated to the country, and the ground floor of the school was turned into a mortuary, but many of the children had returned to London by May 1940 so the school had to be reopened. The roof and upper floors were damaged by incendiaries later in 1940, but work went on virtually uninterrupted.

In 1952 the Secondary and Primary departments were separated, the Secondary School going to St Martin-in-the-Fields School, leaving the Juniors and Infants in sole possession.

ST MARK CE

North Audley Street. In 1903 it had accommodation for 392 pupils.

Opened in 1831, on the north side of St Mark's Chapel, as the first Infant School for the parish of St George's, taking children from 2 to 7 years of age.

ARCHBISHOP TENISON'S SCHOOL

Founded by Archbishop Tenison in 1700 as a free school in King Street.

Began as a small charity school annexed to St Thomas's Church, Kingly Street (formerly King St), which was erected as a proprietary chapel in 1702 by Dr Thomas Tenison, then Archbishop of Canterbury, on the site of an earlier wooden tabernacle or oratory which he had erected about 1687, while rector of St James's. St Thomas's became a district church in St James's parish in 1869.

In the 1680s the rapid increase in population led to division of St Martin's parish into two new parishes: St James and St Anne. These new churches still insufficient, so Dr Tenison (first rector of St James) began in 1687 to erect a temporary chapel in King (now Kingly) Street, in the northern, and less fashionable quarter of his large parish.

Apart from the Boys' Offertory School, the poorer inhabitants of the parish of St James had no free schools. Dr Tenison had already founded a free school in St Martin's, while rector there. Now inhabitants of St James's could not send their children there, so he decided to found a charity school for boys alongside his new chapel. Plot of land he bought for the chapel and school in 1687 was on the west side of King Street, and stretched back to Swallow Street. The chapel was completed in 1688, and at first the boys were taught inside the chapel until a separate school room was provided. In 1690 a house was built for the schoolmaster, and a playground was laid out for the boys. In 1700 Tenison executed a deed of settlement, which set up trustees who had to provide one or more schoolmasters to teach 16 poor boys living in the parish of St James, to 'read, write, cast accounts and such other parts of mathematicks as may the better qualify them to be put out Apprentices'.

By 1702, the chapel had become 'so very crazy and badd' that it was demolished and rebuilt very quickly, with a small schoolroom. By 1713 there were 36 scholars, and the school hours were from 7 to 11 o'clock in the morning, and 1 until 5 o'clock in the afternoon, with morning school an hour shorter in winter. The schoolroom was rebuilt in 1824, on the first floor above the new Regent Street entrance to the chapel. In 1849 economies and improvements were made in the running of the charity school, and the curriculum extended to attract more fee-paying pupils. By 1854 there were 80 boys at the school receiving 'a very good religious and commercial education'. 40 were free pupils, and the other 40 were 'of the class above the poor' paying 12s 6d per quarter for their schooling.

However, income was still insufficient to meet the cost of the school. In 1854 the new rector decided to convert the Regent Street entrance to the chapel and the schoolroom above it into a shop. The school also lost its playground, and had to move to new premises at 6 Cambridge (now Lexington) Street.

In 1869 the school, hitherto governed by the Tenison trustees, lost its link with the chapel and was made a separate institution.

In 1871 it was amalgamated with Archbishop Tenison's other school in St Martin's parish, in a new building in Leicester Square designed to accommodate 200 boys.

In 1896 the lofty hall on the first floor was divided into 5 classrooms and a science laboratory on the top floor. The school remained in Leicester Square until it moved to Kennington Oval in 1928.

OFFERTORY SCHOOL

Swallow Street, St James.

Soon after the constitution of the parish in 1685 a boys' charity school was established, to be maintained out of the offertory money, hence its name. For many years after 1704 the school occupied a room over a watch house which had been built in the churchyard of St James's Church. By the 1760s the watch house was no longer large enough, and in 1767, both the school and the watch house moved to a house on the north side of Little Vine Street. In 1786 it was destroyed in a fire which destroyed several houses in Swallow Street, Vine Street and Little Vine Street. It was rebuilt, and a survey shows that the watch house occupied the basement and ground floor, while the whole of the upper storey was one lofty room for the Offertory School. In 1816 another storey was added for the use of the schoolmaster.

In 1836 a new school was erected round the corner, on the site of 7 and 8 Swallow Street (now no 14). In 1854 80 boys were clothed and educated here, 'selected from the largest and poorest families, provided the parents are of good character; and preference is given to those children whose parents were married in a place of worship belonging to the Established Church, and to those who were baptized at St James's Church, and who were baptized within a year after their birth'. Boys were apprenticed by the parish on leaving the school.

The school was eventually closed in 1881

BURLINGTON SCHOOL

This charity school for girls of the parish of St James, was founded at the instigation of the rector, William Wake, in 1700, although the date of foundation is traditionally said to be Christmas 1699. The name Burlington was not adopted by the school in its early days. The first recorded use is on Horwood's map of 1792.

From 1700 to 1721 it occupied a house in Carnaby Street. 60 girls were educated and clothed here. However, the standard of education was not high because in 1705 the trustees sought permission from the trustees of Archbishop Tenison's school 'that such of their boys as are qualified for it, may be employed to teach such of the girls of this school as shall be thought fit to learn'. The girls were taught to read and write, but the training was chiefly for domestic service or apprenticeship in trade, which continued until the 19th century.

In 1715 the trustees began to look for a site for a boarding school. Several sites were considered, including one near the boys' charity school, but finally the Earl of Burlington agreed to give them some land in the northern part of his new estate at a reduced rent. It was on the north side of 'the street intended to be called Boyle Street', fronting the street intended to be called Great Burlington Street. The front of the school had to be built to fit in with Lord Burlington's taste. There is no surviving record of what this looked like; the front was altered in 1876.

The move from Carnaby Street appears to have taken place in 1721, but the new school in Boyle Street was not fully opened as a boarding school until 1725. In 1723 the trustees decided that 30 girls should be taught and lodged in the first year, but the carpenter was ordered to make 20 bedsteads for 40 girls. The school may have been temporarily situated in Old Burlington Street during the transition.

Although the new building was very handsome, the girls' education was strictly to fit them to be good servants. In 1732 they were taught housewifery including washing, scouring, sewing plain work and spinning flax, besides reading and writing.

This was still the case in 1854, when 110 girls, children of poor housekeepers, parishioners, or old residents in the parish were boarded, clothed, educated and trained for domestic service. 'Both the educational and industrial arrangements of this institution will admit, in many respects, of great improvement ... The poor will be benefited when so large a number of children are, not only taken off their hands at an early age, but fitted for situations of the most respectable description; and the wealthier class, by the supply of a want daily more and more felt - that of well-principled, well-educated, and well-trained female servants'.

In 1861 fee-paying boarders were admitted for the first time, and the character of the school changed dramatically in 1867 when fees were made payable for all children admitted. The distinctive 'charity dress' was abandoned at this time, but the girls' needlework still helped to provide income for the school.

In 1876 the school became a Middle Class School for Girls, providing 'an education of a higher order than is given in elementary schools'. Girls could now be trained as teachers here, and was now mainly a fee-paying day school. An extra storey was also added to the school building. By 1881 numbers had risen to 280, but had fallen by 1897 to 152 (137 girls and 15 boys). Only 60 of these were from the parish of St James, with others from surrounding parishes including 8 from St Anne's. Most of these were the children of hotel keepers, lodging house keepers, tradesmen and shop keepers.

From 1905 the school ceased to take boarders and by 1911 over a third of the pupils came from outside Westminster. In 1922 it was reported that a psalm was substituted for a reading at morning assembly 'as the noise of carters outside ... renders the reading inaudible'. No doubt coming from the Coach and Horses Yard. The school still had some pupils from Soho, but it was increasingly drawing pupils from the suburbs, and in 1928, partly because of problems with the building, it was decided to move the school. A new school was built in Shepherd's Bush, opening in 1937, when the old school was demolished.

CRAVEN CHAPEL SCHOOL

Foubert's Place, St James's.

Craven Congregational Chapel opened 1822 on part of the site of the former Carnaby Market. The chapel had seating for 2,000, and seems to have had a large congregation. In 1874 a lecture hall and schools were opened on the north side of Foubert's Place. These were planned to replace the basement schoolrooms which had been part of the original chapel plan. Craven Hall had an infants' school on the ground floor, a girls' school in a lofty hall on the first floor, and a boys' school on the second floor.

In 1894 the chapel and hall closed and were transferred to the West London Methodist Mission, and in 1907 the hall was sold to Messrs Liberty.

DUFOUR'S PLACE SCHOOL

In 1833 a school was opened on the ground to the east of no 9 Dufour's Court (now Place). The school survived until 1923.

FOUBERT'S ACADEMY

In 1687, Lewis Maidwell (1650-1716), the son of a Northamptonshire lawyer, set up a boarding school in King Street for the sons of the nobility and gentry, which was run on advanced lines and included a riding school for his pupils called an 'Academy for the Great Horse'. As well as the usual classical education the curriculum included French, Italian, mathematics, 'merchants' accounts', navigation, astronomy, geography, history and chronology, as well as dancing, fencing and riding. Music must also have been taught because in 1689 a new work by Henry Purcell, 'A Welcome Song at the Prince of Denmark's Coming Home' was performed at the school. The school attracted a very fashionable clientele.

From 1700 to 1705 Maidwell petitioned Parliament for permission to turn the school from a private into a public institution for the free education of 40 scholars in 'Languages, Arts and Exercises'. He produced pamphlets, and suggested the school could be supported by a tax on all printed books and papers. He blamed his lack of success on the jealousy of the universities. His one success was in 1702, when William III granted a charter of incorporation to the school as the 'Royal School of King William the Third', but he failed to get financial backing and finally sold the school to Henry Foubert about 1707.

Henry Foubert was the proprietor of a school of arms, founded by his father in Paris. As Huguenots, the family were forced to flee to England in 1679. His father appears to have opened a fencing school, and kept stables in Great Windmill Street in 1689 and 1690. Major Henry Foubert, who had distinguished himself at the Battle of the Boyne, had a house in Coventry Street and then Rupert Street before taking over Maidwell's school in King Street. He managed the school until his death in 1743, when it was taken over by his nephew Solomon Durrell until 1771, and then by the latter's son-in-law Thomas Evans, who took the name Durrell, until 1778, when it closed. By this time the academy had declined in fashion and become merely a riding school and stables.

In 1782 the school was sold to the parish of St James's who used it to accommodate the older children from the workhouse. They set up a School of Industry to maintain, educate and employ the poor children of the parish. The boys were taught shoemaking, and the girls household work, as well as reading and writing. In 1797 there were 270 children in the school. At the age of 13 or 14 they were apprenticed, many going to cotton mills in Derbyshire and Manchester. The boys were also taught navigation, and 75 'promising boys' were sent into the Navy during the Napoleonic Wars with France. Other boys were apprenticed to the fishing industry.

The school was demolished in 1820 for the building of Regent Street.

ST JAMES'S NATIONAL SCHOOL

In 1854 there were National Schools for 250 boys, 220 girls and 240 infants in Marshall Street, free schools for children of the poorest class under St Luke's Church, Berwick Street, and Infant School in Swallow Street, Sunday Schools at each of these places, Evening Schools in Marshall Street, a Middle School (which educates 40 poor boys free), and evening school at Archbishop Tenison's Chapel. Peter Street

In 1755 an independent Scottish Chapel was built in Peter Street, described as 'a small neat building, with three galleries and conveniently fitted up with pews'. In the 1850s it was used by the Wesleyans, but it ceased to be used as a chapel in 1858.

It later became St Luke's National School which was demolished in 1880 for the erection of Pulteney Board School.

ST MARGARET, WESTMINSTER

In 1681, Thomas Jordan was schoolmaster of a parish school for poor children in St Margaret's Westminster. He was removed from office as the vestry felt 'he is not capable of performing that undertaking as it ought to be done'; despite his appeal on the grounds of his own poverty, 'having four small children and an impotent sister lying on his hands'. He was replaced by Judith, the wife of Thomas Smith, who was to receive half a chaldron of coals and any money left over in the charity account once the coals were paid for. [St Margaret's Vestry Minutes]

In 1871 there were 14 'private adventure' or dame schools, with accommodation for 387 and average attendance of 307.

In the 19th century Westminster had about a dozen private academies at any one time.

Every new church and chapel had to have its satellite schools, dedicated to the education of the poor. Mainly Anglican, but Roman Catholics and Wesleyan Methodists also made substantial provision. Church of England's National School movement had its training college in Victoria Street. When School Board for London established in 1870, Westminster was reasonably well covered by school provision. Only three new schools were built 1870-1890: Horseferry Road, Buckingham Gate and St George's Row.

In 1996 the area of the former City contains three secondary schools, of which one is Anglican; 12 primary schools, of which 8 are Anglican and 2 are Roman Catholic; and one nursery school.

BLUECOAT SCHOOL

Built 1708 on Brewer's Green, by the Greene family, founders of the Stag Brewery. Sprang from the religious defensiveness of a group of worshippers at the Broadway Chapel, part of a late 17th century Protestant backlash against Jesuit led educational initiatives, begun in St Martin's and Covent Garden. The boys' school was founded in 1688, in Duck Lane (now St Matthew Street), girls joining them in 1713 in the new building in Brewer's Green. The building was the gift of the brewer William Greene (he used the cellars for storing beer). In 1842 there were 86 poor children (52 boys and 34 girls). The children were taught to read, write and cast accounts; the girls were also taught needle and household work. In 1846-8 there were 134 poor children (100 boys, of which 52 were clothed by the charity, and 34 girls), aged 7-14; numbers of boys had increased because of the demand. Curriculum was religious education, plus reading, writing, arithmetic, grammar, geography and history. The girls were also taught knitting, needlework and household work. An examination of the children took place in the school room every Sunday evening in the presence of the Governors and the public.

Palmer Street. In 1903 it had accommodation for 342 pupils.
Known as Christ Church Schools by 1845 [See: Letter E3309], formerly known as the Westminster New Charity School (still called that in 1842). In 1845 it was in a private house at 5, Dacre Street, which was too small to meet the demand.
Originated in 1795. Records show occasional support from the Gentry - but owes its continued existence [1845] to zeal of Governors, who were local tradesmen. Acted as subscribers, and provided clothes for 50 boys and girls. In 1845 wanted to open a subscription to build a new school. Hope to obtain a site from the Dean and Chapter of Westminster. 'No stronger motive in favor of this object can be adduced than that multitudes of children of the industrious classes in the district are exposed to the demoralizing influence, and example, of as great a mass of vice, as it is possible to find concentrated, in any part of the Metropolis, and that there seems no mode, under Providence, of staying this moral plague, so likely to prove effectual, as the present attempt to provide them with the surest safeguard against contamination in the blessing of a sound and religious education?'

It seems that a temporary school (and church) was erected in Palmer's Village, attended by about 80 boys. There was also a girls' school, attended by about 80-90 girls in a hired room in the area. There were also Sunday Schools. However, the temporary school had to be demolished in 1851 for the building of Victoria Street. New site proposed is near Shaftesbury Terrace, Vauxhall Road, for a school for 400 children. [Is this St Michael's]

EMANUEL HOSPITAL SCHOOL

Although a school for 20 poor children was founded under the will of Lady Anne Dacres in 1594, and a hospital was built in Tothill Fields for poor men and women, no school was established until 1736. In 1795 the number of girls in the school was increased from 10 to 12, and a school was set up near Brandsburton in Yorkshire, to which 8 boys were sent. This school closed in 1805. In 1817 there were 10 boys and 12 girls in the school, who lived there, and were taught reading, writing and arithmetic, and the girls needlework and household work. Remain until the age of 14, when they are usually apprenticed.

Wore brown coats. Founded in 1738, under an endowment in the will of Lady Dacre. Will of Lady Anne Dacre, 1594, directed executors to buy piece of ground in or near Tothill Fields for Emanuel Hospital, to provide homes for 20 aged people and 20 poor children. Children were not admitted and school established until 1736. In 1795, the number of poor girls was increased from 10 to 12, and a school was set up near Brandsburton, Yorkshire, to which 8 boys were sent. This school closed in 1805. In 1818 there were 10 boys and 12 girls, aged 7-14. Moved to Wandsworth in 1882.

EMERY HILL

1674, Emery Hill in his will left money to found a 'free school to teach 20 poor town-born children born in Westminster'. Children were to be taught English and Latin, and to write and keep accounts, but especially to be well catechised and instructed in the principles of religion. No boys were educated until 1817, when 20 boys were taught in the school belonging to Palmer's Charity, which had just been rebuilt.

GREY COAT HOSPITAL [CE SCHOOL]

Grey Coat Place, SW1 (Upper, 1996); Graham Terrace, SW1 (Lower, 1996)

Charity school founded in 1698 by 8 local tradesmen of St Margaret's, Westminster and supported by voluntary subscriptions, for the education of poor children 'in the principles of the Christian religion, teaching to read, and instructing them in the Church catechism, and discipline of the Church of England as by law established, and for teaching to write and cast accounts' and (when fit) binding them apprentices to honest trades and employments'.

Had its origin in the inability of parish nurses, employed to look after orphaned and neglected children, to keep their young charges under control. Local shopkeepers appalled by parish children wandering up and down begging in the streets. In 1698 founded a day school for 50 boys in the Abbey Sanctuary. In 1701 the Grey Coat Hospital became a boarding establishment, to remove poor children from the evil influences at home, moving into the old parish workhouse facing the Artillery ground, and admitting girls for the first time. Children were given a basic education, being trained primarily to take up apprenticeships in a suitable trade, or to go into domestic service. In 1874 it became exclusively a girls' school, under church management.

From 1785, 60 boys and 30 girls were admitted. A mathematical school was added in 1739 and a master employed to teach navigation – several boys apprenticed to the sea. Examination every Sunday evening which is open to the public. Children appointed by the governors; 10 by Dean and Chapter of Westminster.

Amalgamated with St Michael's.

Rebuilt in the 1950s after war damage.

In 1997 it is a voluntary aided secondary school with 944 pupils, of whom 17% are second language learners.

ONE TUN RAGGED SCHOOL

3 Perkin's Rents (later Westminster Buildings, Old Pye Street).

The early history of the school is not clear, but it seems to have been an offshoot of the Pear Street Ragged School. In 1853 Adeline Cooper was asked by Lord Shaftesbury to come to its rescue, and after problems with the tenancy she began a new school in two small cottages known as Simon's Buildings, in Old Pye Street. These premises were also unsuitable and she began a successful campaign to raise money to convert the One Tun public house, a notorious den of thieves in Perkins' Rents, into a school. The pub was vacant at the time as 'the last tenant had disappeared without paying the rent, and had carried off everything that could be conveniently removed'. During the alterations nearly a bushel of counterfeit gold and silver coins were discovered behind one of the walls. The One Tun Ragged School opened here in 1858. In 1871 it had accommodation for 95 pupils, and an average attendance of 133. The lease ran out in 1879 and the school moved into Westminster Buildings, a block of rooms for working-class families with a working men's club and library, built by Adeline Cooper in 1866 for the families of the children in the Ragged School, many of them costermongers and hawkers. The school remained here in Old Pye Street until it closed in the 1930s.

PALMER'S SCHOOL

In 1656, Rev James Palmer, conveyed to trustees chapel, school and almshouse recently erected in Tothill Fields. Funds for the education of 20 poor male children born in St Maragaret's.

School was for catechising and instructing old men and women (in almshouse) and children in religion and piety, and educating the poor children in learning. No children educated after 1728, until school (and almshouses and chapel) rebuilt in 1817, when 20 pupils were again taken in.

These were taught in the same room as 20 children from Mr Emery Hill's Charity. The boys were taught Latin grammar as well as English according to the instructions of the founder.

St Gabriel's Church, Warwick Square, was consecrated in 1853, and began to run classes 'in a miserable hired room' soon afterwards. A public meeting held in 1861 decided that 'the rapid increase in the number of the poorer classes in this district renders it a matter of urgent necessity to provide means for the education of the children', and within a year the Church had opened a school on Distillery Lane, later called Glasgow Terrace, under the lee of Octavius Smith's establishment. St Gabriel's school was very popular, and some were soon complaining of the classrooms 'crowded state'.

WESTMINSTER NEW CHARITY SCHOOL

Founded 1795, in private house at 5, Dacre Street, for the education of 100 children, aged 8-14, according to the principles of the Church of England (of whom 25 boys and 25 girls were clothed annually). Supported by voluntary subscriptions and donations. Funds were also raised by the children doing paid needlework. After the building of Christ Church in Broadway, renamed Christ Church Schools.

WESTMINSTER SCHOOL

17 Deans Yard. It is the only long-established London school to remain on its original site.

Westminster School has been teaching scholars in the precincts of the Abbey since at least 1394, offering a classical education for those destined for the learned professions. It continues to be one of the country's foremost public schools.

In 1995 takes boys and girls, age 13-18, as day pupils and weekly boarders.

Its origins can be traced to 1179, when the Benedictine monks of the Abbey of St Peter in Westminster were required by Pope Alexander III to provide a small charity school. Its continuous existence is certain from the early 14th century. After the dissolution of the monasteries in 1540, Henry VIII personally ensured its survival by statute, and Elizabeth I confirmed royal patronage in 1560, and is celebrated as the School's Foundress.

ST MARTIN-IN-THE-FIELDS

ARCHBISHOP TENISON'S SCHOOL

Founded by Archbishop Thomas Tenison in 1697, when he was rector of St Martin-in-the-Fields as a free school for poor children of the parish, in the new churchyard of St Martin's. He also founded a library there. (He later became rector of St James Piccadilly, and founded a second charity school with the same name there).

30 boys instructed in reading, writing, arithmetic, English grammar and Latin grammar. Day pupils, must be recommended by 3 or more respectable householders; appointed by Vicar and churchwardens; name, occupation and residence of father and mother must always be given. Boys pay for books and stationery.

In 1854, the school was known as Archbishop Tenison's Library and Grammar School, and was situated in Castle Street, Leicester Square, in the parish of St Martin-in-the-Fields. In 1861 the library was sold and in 1868 the site of the school was compulsorily purchased for the enlargement of the National Gallery. In 1866, its name was changed to Archbishop Tenison's Grammar School (for Boys of the Middle Classes). In 1872 it became Archbishop Tenison's United Grammar School, when the parish of St James's joined with St Martin-in-the-Fields in its government. [Castle Street was dropped from its address - becoming simply Leicester Square - check whether this was a new building]

In 1869 the freehold of 30 and 31 Leicester Square, the site of the Sabloniere Hotel, was purchased by the trustees of Archbishop Tenison's School. The Hotel was demolished and a new school building erected to accommodate 200 boys. In 1871 the two schools, in St Martin's and St James's were amalgamated. In 1896 the lofty hall on the first floor was divided into 5 classrooms and a science laboratory on the top floor. The school remained in Leicester Square until it moved to Kennington Oval in 1928.

In 1854 it was in financial trouble, but more than 80 children of parishioners (which parish - St James's?) 'receive there a very good religious and commercial education'. 40 are free boys, the other 40 'are of the class above the poor', and pay 12s 6d per quarter for their schooling. BEDFORDBURY SCHOOLS

Founded as Bedfordbury Mission Mixed School in 1863 in a 'good room' forming part of the buildings of the Bedfordbury Mission Church. The school was passed as efficient in 1871. In 1878 average attendance was about 110. One of many schools in the parish of St Martin-in-the-Fields, it was paid for by a Voluntary Rate. In 1891 the name changed to Bedfordbury Infant Schools. It closed in 1893, by which time attendance had dropped to about 45. Throughout its history it was under the direction of a schoolmistress.

ST MARTIN'S CHARITY SCHOOL

Established in 1699 and supported originally by subscriptions. In 1817 the school was in Hemmings Row and had 80 boys and 40 girls. The boys were taught reading, writing and arithmetic and the girls the same, with the addition of needlework and housework. Boys were frequently apprenticed from the school.

Hungerford Market. Founded 1699. May 1699 appeal went out to parishioners for subscriptions and donations to start a parochial charity school in the Strand. So successful was it that enough money was raised to hire a large room in Hungerford Market House, nearby, formerly used by the French Huguenots as a church. The room was furnished with benches and St Martin's School was opened for fifty poor boys. In 1700 it was agreed that the school should be extended to take up to forty poor girls in 'a very convenient place in Castle Street, near Leicester Square. 1704 – new, larger premises were found for girls'school in Hunt's Court, Castle Street. 1705 – annual report of SPCK on charity schools in London and Westminster stated that St Martin's taught and clothes eighty boys and fifty girls. 1718: school extended to take 30 orphans (as neighbouring charity schools were doing) - leasing upper floor of Hungerford Market House. 1781 moved to larger premises in a house in George Street. 1793 house had become too dilapidated. New school built in Hemming's Row (St Martin's Place). Opened 1797. (Sold under National Gallery enlargement Act 1870s).1874: Moved to new purpose-built, four-storey school at 15 Charing Cross Road. Became St Martin's Endowed Middle School for Girls. 150 girls. Changed status from charity school to endowed secondary school for girls. [what happened to boys?]

1928: school moved to new building at Tulse Hill. Still there today

ST MARTIN'S HIGH SCHOOL FOR GIRLS

Charing Cross Road. Founded in 1875 as St Martin’s Middle Class School for Girls. It was presumably seen as a sister school for Archbishop Tenison’s Grammar School for Middle Class Boys. In 1890, the word ‘Class’ was dropped from the name, and in 1895 it became St Martin’s High School for Girls.

1874: Moved to new purpose-built, four-storey school at 15 Charing Cross Road. Became St Martin’s Endowed Middle School for Girls. 150 girls. Changed status from charity school to endowed secondary school for girls. [what happened to boys?]

ST MARTIN’S PAROCHIAL SCHOOLS

In 1854 there were two schools, one for boys in Adelaide Place (which shared the same headmaster as the National School), and a girls’ school in Hemmings Row. The schools were supported by charitable bequests and voluntary contributions. In 1871 the girls’ school at Hemmings Row seems to have closed, and in 1874 this reflected in a change of name, becoming St Martin’s Parochial School.

Hemmings Row Parochial Charity School for Girls was established for both boys and girls in Hemmings Row in 1699. Its site was compulsorily purchased for the enlargement of the National Gallery in 1868. It moved to a site to the east of the new Archbishop Tenison's school in Leicester Square. In 1928 the school, now known as St Martin's High School for Girls, moved to Tulse Hill.

ST PAUL'S CHARITY SCHOOL

Covent Garden

A school for boys was established in 1701, and extended to girls in 1712. There was no school house and the charity children, 15 boys and 15 girls, were lodged and boarded in the poorhouse. During school hours the boys were kept by themselves in the hall of the poorhouse and at night they slept separately from the adult paupers. The girls were kept and taught in a separate wing. 35 pauper boys were taught with the charity boys on the 'Madras system', and 18 pauper girls were taught under the same system with the charity girls. Children appointed by the trustees. When a vacancy occurred – notice was given in church of the election when the 'fittest objects of charity' were selected 'giving a preference to the children of decayed housekeepers'. Children admitted at the age of 8 and kept until 13 or 15 when they were apprenticed or put into service. On leaving school each was given a Prayer Book, Bible and some SPCK tracts. They were taught reading, writing and arithmetic and religion on the principles of the Established Church. The girls were also taught needlework and spinning, they made their own clothes and the linen of the boys. Part of the boys' time was devoted to making bed-sacking, corn sacks and rope mats under the superintendence of a task master. The children go to church twice on Sundays and every evening prayers are read to all inhabitants of the poorhouse. They also have a lecture every Friday evening from the Curate of the parish.
