

Marriage Licences

To obtain a marriage licence from the Bishop of London or Archbishop of Canterbury's Faculty Office or Vicar General, the couple, or more usually the bridegroom, had to swear that there was no just cause or impediment why they should not marry. This was the marriage allegation. The bond was for a sum of money to be paid if it turned out that the marriage was contrary to Canon Law. The bishop kept the allegation and bond and issued the licence to the groom, who then gave it to the vicar of the church where they were to get married. There was no obligation for the vicar to keep the licence, and many were simply destroyed.

There is a useful booklet, Bishops' Transcripts and Marriage Licences, Bonds and Allegations by Jeremy Gibson, published by FFHS, 5th edition 2001.
